These days, you can share files using all of the different cloud storage providers like Dropbox and OneDrive, but if all you want is a super easy way to share files with people, Jumpshare might be worth a look. Note: Jumpshare is also available for OS X as well. What’s Different About Jumpshare? The primary selling point with Jumpshare is that it can natively handle over 200 file formats in the browser. So when you share a file with somebody else, they will be able to view the file in their browser, no software (or account for them) required. Jumpshare’s HTML5 file viewer works for almost any type of file. The second major selling point is that Jumpshare is extremely easy to use: you just drag and drop a file onto the icon to upload it, and the share link is immediately on the clipboard, ready to paste. Or you can use the sharing options in the tray icon’s popup menu. If you have the Plus version, you can make a link self-destruct after a certain number of days or you can disable download so they can only preview the file in the browser. Just email them directly from the popup interface, or you can copy / paste the link and send them a regular email in your preferred client instead. If you like to take and share a lot of screenshots, Jumpshare has that option built right in. Their web panel also allows you to easily deal with your files, and works a lot like the web panels for Dropbox or anything other storage service. The difference is that this one is focused around file sharing. The free version of Jumpshare gives you 2GB of storage, but the paid Plus version gives you up to 1 TB of storage and a ton of extra features. If you often need to quickly share files with clients or other people, Jumpshare is definitely worth a look. It’s free, after all, to try it out. Try out Jumpshare for free Jumpshare is developed by our friends from AddictiveTIPS.com. A lien is a financial claim you hold against someone else’s real property. Because of your claim, the owner of this property cannot sell or transfer title to the property to anyone else until your financial claim is satisfied. You may choose to enforce your lien by forcing foreclosure on the real property against which you levied the lien. Courts across the country have modernized the way they do business, and it is not unusual to have a lot of the procedures take place online. Learning how to file a lien online will save you a lot of time and, at the same time, prevent some of the mistakes that could invalidate your claim. Log on to the clerk and recorder’s website for the county where the property you wish to encumber with a lien is located. Because lien laws vary across the nation, it is imperative that you find out exactly which documents you need to file, the filing fees that are involved and also if the particular clerk and recorder’s office will accept online lien filings in the first place. Access the online filing option in the county where the real property you wish to encumber with a lien is located. Scroll through the document explanation and begin by entering your name or your company’s name. If you are filing on behalf of a company, identify your name, relationship to the company and whether it is a sole proprietorship, corporation or limited liability company. Supply the information about the owner of the property on which you are placing the lien. You need the full name, address and the relationship you and the owner have. Input information about why you’re filing for a lien on the property. In case of a mechanic’s lien, specify in detail the total of the contract or invoice and how much was paid. In addition, when you file a lien online as a contractor, the clerk and recorder’s office requires the dates on which you began work, stopped work and served an intent to file a lien. Furnish information about the property on which you are placing the lien. You need the owner’s full name and the legal description of the real property. The latter may be found on the website of the county assessor. If there is more than one owner to the property, you need to list all of them. Print out copies of the completed lien documents. Read carefully through the online options to learn if the clerk sends out the documents to the parties named in the paperwork or if you are required to do so. Pay the filing fee for the online lien with your credit card. Filing fees vary by state and county. Serve the affected parties with the lien documents if necessary. Do so by certified mail, return receipt requested. Warnings Do not overstate the amount of money that is owed. If and when you decide to enforce your lien, you must back up each penny to which you claim entitlement. Filing for divorce is never an easy thing to do. There are feelings involved, confused thoughts, and worries over finances and even custody if you have children. It can be grueling both physically and mentally to go through the divorce process. And yet sometimes a relationship has devolved to the point where divorce is the only logical way out. In times like these, it’s important to understand what your options are. You have the ability to file for divorce with a lawyer present in real life, but you also have the ability to file for divorce online. It’s a quick, easy, and effective way to get the process over and done with. Get Divorced Online Today! Start Your Divorce Documents Needed for Divorce The specific documents you will need to file for divorce will depend on both the state you live and what is all involved in the divorce. This includes property, assets, debts, children and alimony, because the documents vary so much from state to state, it is best if you use a step-by-step system for determining and filling out the necessary divorce paperwork. We suggest MyDivorcePapers.com as a trusted source that makes completing the necessary documents easy. How to Fill Out Your Divorce Paperwork Reading legal paperwork is bad enough. Now combine that with government paperwork and divorce filing papers can seem like a completely foreign language. The worst part is having just one little harmless, meaningless mistake can often result in a rejected form, thereby causing unnecessary delays in processing your divorce. If you are looking to avoid the huge legal fees that come with divorce lawyers, we suggest an online walk-through of divorce forms in your state. How to File Your Divorce Paperwork You need to have lived in the state that you’re petitioning for divorce in for anywhere between three months and six months before the petition is filed. Also, you need to make sure you get the county right on the petition. This is a very important note that not everyone takes into account. It’s very important to file in the correct county, but it’s even more important to file in the correct state. Once you have filled out the proper paperwork and accurately determined the correct county to file in, all you have to do is actually file the divorce petition with the county clerk. Of course if you are doing it all online you could find your county’s e-file system. DISCLAIMER: The views and opinions expressed in this article are those of the authors and do not necessarily reflect the official policy or position of the site owner or any brands and companies mentioned here. I can’t say Carbonite without thinking of Hans Solo frozen within the fictional substance by Jabba the Hutt in The Empire Strikes Back. According to the company’s Web site, this is where the name came from—not the family of explosive compounds. Whatever the origins of the name, Carbonite ($55/year) is a pretty darn good online backup service. Initially, I found the way Carbonite integrates itself with the Windows operating system confusing—a quick but mandatory tutorial might have helped. If there was one, I might’ve missed it as my install crashed at the very end—a non-replicable event on my part as it subsequently proved. Carbonite handily lets you right-click on any folder or file to add/remove it from your backups and also adds a drive to Windows Explorer from which you can restore files (or de-select them from being backed up). If you’re backing up a lot of different files and folders, there’s also a time-saving search-to-restore function to cut down on the browsing. The logic behind Carbonite’s automatic selection of data for backup could perhaps be improved. Unlike most programs that automatically include the Desktop and My Documents (by far the most popular locations for user generated data files), Carbonite only optionally includes these folders. Also, it seemed to back up everything in the Application Data folders—a safe move, but one that adds a lot of data that’s useless under any restore scenario that includes re-installing applications. Other than the one-time install crash, Carbonite was as solid as a rock (pun intended) through all my backups and restores. And once I had sussed everything out, I greatly appreciated the Windows Explorer integration—especially the colored dots added to file and folder icons to indicate their backup status (green equals backed up, red means not backed up). You can disable the behavior, however. I wish Carbonite had taken it a step further and put dots (perhaps the company logo’s purple) on folders available for restore. After you drill down two levels, the restore window looks confusingly similar to a regular Explorer window. At $55 per year, per PC for unlimited backups, Carbonite is a bit cheaper than the unlimited versions of Fabrik and Mozy. It’s easier on the eye and offers better interface integration, though in my book, the logic behind the automatic selection of files needs some rethinking. All in all, if one of the free plans (CrashPlan, Mozy, Fabrik, and SpiderOak all have free plans) won’t cover your needs, Carbonite is well worth a look.
